I think it's important to share new initiatives that you come across in the family law world. Last week Emma Cohn and Stacey Hart from AKidsSpace came to talk to us about the work they do. Emma is an experienced drama therapist and is registered with the Health Professional Council and Stacey is an experienced counsellor and member of the British Association of Counsellors and Psychologists. They explained that their work at AKidsSpace revolved around supporting children who are caught up in their parents separation/divorce. They do this in a number of ways to include running workshops for children or providing one to one sessions. They use a wide variety of techniques in their work to include art, drama, role play, games, movement, relaxation techniques, music and stories. Their workshops take place after school or at weekends or in the school holidays. The website www.akidspace.co.uk is really informative and the testimonials inspirational. What an amazing organisation!
